EDITOR'S NOTE

This edition of the Florida A&M University (FAMU) Law Review is comprised of articles and notes on various topics which represent a vast array of legal issues that may have an effect on each of us at various points in our lives. This edition begins with the importance of getting legal access to all people. Understanding the necessity of providing reasonable access to the justice system will help citizens and residents that are facing the other issues underscored in this edition, including possible deportation, international banking laws, litigation and document review, as well as the judicial understanding of breast augmentation litigation for any possible future claims. While each article or note boasts a differing theme, they are tied together with the thread of understanding the law and how the law changes.

The privilege to present these perspectives has been an honor that I would like to take a moment to recognize. On behalf of the FAMU Law Review staff, the FAMU College of Law faculty and the administration, I thank each author for granting us the opportunity to share your perspectives and insight.

I also would like to thank each member of the FAMU Law Review senior and junior staff whose hard work, dedication, and time has not gone unnoticed and which has enabled this edition to be published. I would finally like to recognize the Editorial Board, who have worked hard to create this edition, without whom none of this would be possible.
