EDITOR'S NOTE

This edition of the Florida A&M University (FAMU) Law Review represents a collection of works written by individuals across the United States. Instead of focusing on one broad subject matter, this edition takes a unique approach and facilitates a journal that covered numerous areas of discussion such as retaliation remedies available to whistleblowers, agency power, gun control in schools, litigation finances, and gaps in institutional arbitration rules. The privilege to present these perspectives has been an honor that I would like to take a moment to recognize. On behalf of the FAMU Law Review staff, the FAMU College of Law faculty and the administration, I thank each author for granting us the opportunity to share your perspectives and insight.

While the authors are an integral part of a Law Review journal, this issue would not have materialized without the hard work and dedication of the FAMU Law Review staff members. I would like to thank each member of the FAMU Law Review senior and junior staff whose hard work, dedication, and time has not gone unnoticed and which has enabled this edition to be published. I would finally like to recognize the Editorial Board, who have worked hard to create this edition, without whom none of this would be possible.
